Co-editor in chief of Annali d’italianistica

Annali d’italianistica is conducting a search for mid-career, dynamic colleague(s), with broad research interests, to collaborate as co-editors in chief with Dino S. Cervigni, the journal’s founder and editor in chief, to produce the annual monographic volume organized and edited by the guest editors with the aim of taking over, within 2-3 years, all the tasks carried out by the journal’s founder.

The organization of Annali is well known to Italianists. After selecting a topic (to be approved by the editor in chief and the board of co-editors) two or three years ahead of time, guest editors solicit and vet all essays and submit them to the editor in chief for final approval. With the assistance of the Board of Co-editors and other scholars, the editor in chief reads all submitted essays and makes final recommendations to the guest editors.

The new co-editor in chief will work closely with the editor in chief, familiarize himself/herself with all pertinent editorial tasks, and finally take over the editor in chief’s tasks, making sure that the journal will continue well its scholarly mission as it has sought to do since its inception in 1983.

As of January 1, 2017, Annali d’italianistica is housed at the Center for Medieval and Renaissance Studies at Arizona State University in Tempe, AZ, where highly competent and dedicated staff handles all business and technical aspects of the journal’s circulation, advertising, distribution, and production.

Interested colleagues should contact Dr. Susan J. Dudash, the Assistant Director, responsible for Annali, at the Center for Medieval and Renaissance Studies (Susan J. Dudash: Susan.Dudash@asu.edu), with copy to Cervigni (cervigni@unc.edu). In their email, they should outline their interests, qualifications, research interests, two or three names of senior professors who can vouch for them, their Department’s and/or Institution’s approval, and their willingness to serve for an agreed-upon number of years and in due time to seek and train a successor. Their statement should not exceed 500 words. The position may require 4-6 hours of work a week from mid-October to approximately mid-June. Two colleagues who work well together and have already collaborated may submit a joint proposal and share responsibilities. All requests will be kept confidential and will be acknowledged expeditiously. The new co-editor(s) in chief may start any time following appointment.

Many thanks to all for suggestions, recommendations, and applications.

Dino S. Cervigni
